GENERAL FILE.

The special attention of all Postmasters in this Circle is drawn to the instructions contained in the Director-General's Circular No. 28, dated the 28th October 1909, which should be strictly followed.

2. Bags that are in stock as well as those that are received from other Post Offices or R. M. S. sections should be carefully examined with a view to find out whether they are in good condition. While it is very necessary that every unserviceable bag should be withdrawn at once and sent to the Divisional Superintendent, it must be remembered that no bag should be needlessly rejected. Unserviceable bags that are withdrawn should be sent to the Superintendents in the manner specified in rule $\frac{230, \text{volume I}}{223, \text{volume II}}$, accompanied by a special report in each case.

3. Divisional Superintendents who receive the unserviceable bags should examine them personally to ascertain whether they are really unserviceable before sending them to the Stock Depot. An account should be maintained in the office of every Divisional Superintendent regarding the number of bags sent to him by each office during the period of examination; and at the end of the period, the stock register of bags should be obtained from every office in his jurisdiction, and the number of bags to be written off should be entered in the stock register by the Superintendent himself. The bags that are received by the Superintendent should be collected in his office and sent to the Stock Depot at the end of the period. A statement in a tabular form containing the number and particulars of bags withdrawn from use by each office in his jurisdiction should at the same time be prepared and submitted to this office.

4. As the sudden withdrawal of a number of bags would certainly hamper the despatch of mails from post offices in some cases, Superintendents should at once call for reports from Postmasters in their Divisions, and if it is found that any office has a large number of unserviceable bags in stock, an indent should at once be submitted for a sufficient number of bags to replenish the stock of that office. Care should however be taken to see that bags are not unnecessarily indented for. Large offices should be allowed to keep a small surplus of new bags to replace unserviceable bags that may have to be withdrawn. In short, every endeavour should be made to prevent embarrassment to Postmasters in consequence of the withdrawal of unserviceable bags.

5. If any unserviceable bag is detected immediately after the period of examination, the penalty prescribed by the Director-General of Post Office will be strictly enforced.

6. Superintendents will please issue special instructions to Branch Postmasters in their Divisions regarding this.

Large offices should be allowed to keep a small surplus of new bags to replace unserviceable bags that may have to be withdrawn. In short, every endeavour should be made to prevent embarrassment to Postmasters in consequence of the withdrawal of unserviceable bags.

5. If any unserviceable bag is detected immediately after the period of examination, the penalty prescribed by the Director-General of Post Office will be strictly enforced.

6. Superintendents will please issue special instructions to Branch Postmasters in their Divisions regarding this.

unserviceable bag should be withdrawn at once and sent to the Divisional Superintendent, it must be remembered that no bag should be needlessly rejected. Unserviceable bags that are withdrawn should be sent to the Superintendents in the manner specified in rule $\frac{230, \text{volume I}}{223, \text{volume II}}$, accompanied by a special report in each case.

3. Divisional Superintendents who receive the unserviceable bags should examine them personally to ascertain whether they are really unserviceable before sending them to the Stock Depot. An account should be maintained in the office of every Divisional Superintendent regarding the number of bags sent to him by each office during the period of examination; and at the end of the period, the stock register of bags should be obtained from every office in his jurisdiction, and the number of bags to be written off should be entered in the stock register by the Superintendent himself. The bags that are received by the Superintendent should be collected in his office and sent to the Stock Depot at the end of the period. A statement in a tabular form containing the number and particulars of bags withdrawn from use by each office in his jurisdiction should at the same time be prepared and submitted to this office.

4. As the sudden withdrawal of a number of bags would certainly hamper the despatch of mails from post offices in some cases, Superintendents should at once call for reports from Postmasters in their Divisions, and if it is found that any office has a large number of unserviceable bags in stock, an indent should at once be submitted for a sufficient number of bags to replenish the stock of that office. Care should however be taken to see that bags are not unnecessarily indented for. Large offices should be allowed to keep a small surplus of new bags to replace unserviceable bags that may have to be withdrawn. In short, every endeavour should be made to prevent embarrassment to Postmasters in consequence of the withdrawal of unserviceable bags.

5. If any unserviceable bag is detected immediately after the period of examination, the penalty prescribed by the Director-General of Post Office will be strictly enforced.

6. Superintendents will please issue special instructions to Branch Postmasters in their Divisions regarding this.
